

The invention relates to propulsion engineering and can be used at designing engines with restricted overall dimensions. The engine includes at least one cylinder with piston placed in it, with two piston pins, two crankshafts connected to each other with pinions, and two con-rods each of which is connected with the upper head to one of piston pins and with the lower head – to one of crankshafts.