

A device for creation of static pressures contains concentrically located in each other hollow solids of revolution and a working chamber. The working chamber for creation of static pressure is equipped with an electric heater, and safety valves are mounted in each of the bodies of revolution, which are equipped with current-conducting wires isolated one from another. The invention relates to the devices for creation of superhigh static pressure and can be used in production of superhard materials.