

The invention relates to the chemical-and-pharmaceutical industry, in particular to the method for producing the tableted form of Allochol. The method comprises the mixing of the condensed bile with the activated carbon and the excipients, the drying, the granulation, the repeated mixing of the granulate with the minced garlic, the leaves of the nettle and other excipients followed by the compression and the coating.