

The invention relates to measuring technique of laser output power and can be used for laser power control directly during its running, especially for high-power pulse lasers.
The measuring instrument comprises a light-absorbing element with thermocouple and a millivoltmeter.