

The invention relates to electric induction devices. The winding comprises a group at least consisting of two coil pairs connected between them in order of their sequence in the electric circuit placed one above the other along the winding and comprising continuous roll windings.