

The invention relates to the technology for aerating of waste waters. The device contains tubular air flue, the external surface of which is made in form of uniformly interchangeable edges and hollows, in which the radial holes are made, in addition to the above said external surface the dispersive cover is applied, forming canals with edges and hollows, and made two-layered from fiber material.