

The invention relates to machine building. The method includes usage of a commutation switch (command device). The energy accumulated in the inertial energy-storage device and parts and rotating parts of consumers, the energy is overdistributed between consumers with using their motion for the part of cycle in the running mode (mechanically with time displacement of supply of one consumer in relation to the other for part of cycle is inversely related to number of consumers).