

The invention relates to electric power industry and specifically relates to voltage transformer protection from supercurrent damages appearing during ferroresonant process in the networks with used neutral.

In the device to the secondary voltage transformer winding connected in the disconnected triangle is connected a used element and a resistor.