

The invention relates to heat treatment of metals and alloys, first of all the refractory ones, and can be used in production of different construction elements which are used in electronic, light- and radio engineering industry, in the rocket and space engineering and so on. A method will be realized by annealing in a powder mixture.