

The invention relates to method for determination of concentration of dissolved substances with areometric method and is intended for determination of continuously changing content of sugar and ethyl alcohol in wine material in process of its fermentation. The method includes simultaneous determination of content of sugar and alcohol in it by means of areometer with scale that graphically represents numerical interrelations at sugar transformation into alcohol.