

The invention relates to the medicine, in particular to the surgery. The device for wound closure contains two plates and piercing elements, namely flexed needles located in the tissue in pairs in the planes parallel to the wound walls. The piercing elements are fixed by the plates, which are interconnected by the arched rod.