

The invention relates to processes for preparation of motor fuel and can be used in petroleum and chemical, gas processing and by-product-coking industries .

The process is realized by mixing at a given ratio of low octane benzene-containing raw material and components increasing octane level. As benzene-containing raw material the refined oil of benzene reforming or gas condensate are used .