

The invention relates to the dentistry, in particular to the technique for manufacturing the dental implants and may be used for denture making in the patients with partial or complete loss of the teeth. The technique comprises mechanical and thermal treatment. The mechanical treatment is used for making endostal part of the implant and its head with the neck. The parts of the implant are connected by the welding in the inert medium.