

The invention relates to nuclear engineering, particularly to nuclear-power reactors and more specifically to containment shells to prevent contamination of the environment in case of radiation-emitting material leakdown.

The containment shell of the nuclear reactor is made as a cupola. It consists of external and internal layers placed in alignment between them with supporting cylindrical base