

The invention relates to the treatment of sediments, forming by the purification of waste waters and can be used for treatment of surplus activated sludge, obtained under biological purification of waste waters and other organic sediments, which are close by properties to the activated sludge.
The method comprises the introduction into a sediment the solution of lime with a following separation of water.