

The invention proposed relates to the area of rocket-space engineering, in particular to control systems. The method includes operations on measurement of current parameters of motion, determination of disagreement of measured motion parameters and programmed ones and formation of control signal proportional to value of disagreement.