

The invention relates to working of metals by pressure and it is intended for use in metallurgical industry at production of components from the bar of the type of terminals of rail fastening, shackles and loops. A die contains units of preliminary and final bending, which include corresponding matrixes and mounts, a catch of billet and a slide mechanism of displacement of billet from the unit of preliminary bending into the unit of final bending.