

The invention relates to machine-building, in particular to clutches with destructible safety elements, and can be used for protection of mechanisms against overloads in turbo-units and other machines with large torques and high angular velocities. Safety clutch has first and second half-clutches with hubs installed coaxially – one in another, with possibility of respective rotation through intermediate support unit, and destructible safety element connecting the half-clutches.