

The invention relates to area of optical spectroscopy and can be used for measurement of concentration of non-elementary gases and aerosols in different media. The method is in forming IR radiation, passing it through control and measuring channels, detection of radiation having passed, comparison of electric signals and determination of concentration.