

Electromagnetic system for determination of coordinates of underground communications has at least one pair of connected to each other in parallel and placed normally with respect to each other inductivity coils. The invention relates to measuring equipment and can be used for search of underground places of cable and pipe laying.