

The invention relates to guard and fire safety signaling of monitoring sites connected by single-wire line. This invention is directed to creation of such device for signaling of monitoring site state wherein by means of coded sending supply higher information content is achieved and by means of strictly specified sequence is achieved an opportunity to change configuration of monitoring sites and a load-dispatching centre without prealignment (number setting).