

The invention relates to the treatment of water with use of iodine-containing filtering elements and can be used for disinfection and after-purification of water in drinking water supply, and also in the production of mineral waters with a given content of iodine.

A process comprises passing water through serially installed preliminary, iodine-containing and adsorbing filtering elements.