

The invention relates to centrifugal device for separation of component, such as monomer form of fibrin, from the plasma. A method includes processing of plasma by one or more reagents. The reagents are removed from the desired product with the help of a new device for centrifugal filtration.