

Invention relates to device for dissipation of waves (damper). In the device the motion of floating structure upward and/or downward is transformed into the motion of water jets in lateral directions. This stabilizes the floating structure due to the fact that the water jets symbolically increase the size of damper.