

The invention relates to rocket engineering. A method for aircraft control is in receiving modulated laser radiation, its transformation to electric signal, signal proportional to coordinates of aircraft with respect to axis of the beam, formation of control signals through transformation of signals proportional to coordinates of aircraft and related to laser beam to coordinate system related to aircraft, with control signal transformation to rudders deflection implemented by means of steering linkage.