

The proposed method for monitoring state of a transformer tapping switch consists in determining the torque of the switch drive shaft from the voltage and current of the drive motor, comparing the calculating torque with a torque rating, and producing a warning signal if the calculating torque exceeds the torque rating. The switch drive is switched off if the difference between the said torques is significant.