

A process provides for interaction of two original organic components one of which is glacial acetic acid, in the presence of catalyst – concentrated sulphuric acid, at that as the second original organic component the ethyl alcohol main fraction – the byproduct of alcohol production – is used. Technical result being achieved from realization of the invention – increase of productivity and effectiveness of the process. Consumer characteristics related to the technical result - decrease in the prime cost of the desired product.