

The invention relates to the field of electrical engineering, namely to electrosafety and is intended for protection of electrical shock and other hazard effects of current leakage to the ground by determination and further protective bridging of a faulted network phase to the ground