

The proposed static pressure detector for supersonic aircrafts contains a tube of streamlined form with a lateral holes, an internal channel, and a heat exchanger. The heat exchanger, which is made of metal with high heating capacity, is installed in the channel of the detector and designed for decreasing the measurement errors induced by increase of temperature in flight of the aircraft with supersonic velocity.