

A device for flushing the slag from the surface of the metal mirror in the ladle relates to ferrous metallurgy and can be used at removing slag from ladle pots before pouring the cast-iron to the mixer or to steel-smelting unit. In the device, the executive body – cleanser is made with connected to each other with possibility of motion sections having prescribed dimensions and is installed at a telescopic beam with possibility of bringing sections together and apart. Dimensions of the sections provide possibility of following by the working surface of the cleanser the surface of metal in the ladle during the process of slag flushing.