

A disposable glassware for liquids consists of a basis, which passes into a housing of cylindrical, oval or special form, neck with thread or flanges, a seal and a closing cap. The basis, housing, neck and cap are made from thin-walled glass with stiffening ribs tightly wrapped up by congruent shell, which is less than the height of housing, the cap for hermetically sealing the liquid filled into the container has a device for its retention on neck.