

A device is intended for accelerated, cyclic unloading of viscous or toxic liquids through upper hatch of cisterns. It can operate at any time of the year and unload any given quantity of containers (railroad tank cars). The device can operate both with preheating of heat-transfer agent and without it, with use of different valves and springs.