

The invention relates to the field of materials science, namely to the field of forming compact and powdered metals. A device for intensive plastic deformation of material by torsion under high pressure contains a block with Bridgman anvil opposite to the working cylinder of press rotating around its axis and based on a plunger of high-pressure container with liquid. Technical result: compensation of pressure variations on the anvils.