

A combustion process, especially for melting glass, in which a flame is created by a gaseous fuel, characterized in that several regularly spaced peripheral low-pressure gas jets converge on a central high-pressure gas jet; an injector for implementing this process; a burner comprising one or more such injectors; a furnace comprising at least one such burner.