

A vaginal training expander device is designed as V-shaped device consisting of two longitudinal elements interconnected in a resilient mode generating the convex head part. One of these elements contains at least one sealed contact. The other element contains the magnet. Both magnet and sealed contact are connected to power supply and the indication means.