

A method of sowing tilled crops consists in narrowing the interrows between rows of a tilled crop up to a width close to an interval of the distance between the plants in a row.