

The proposed device for checking the accuracy of the position of building elements consists of several modules. Each module contains an optical radiation, a lens, and a photodetector. The modules are fixed to the elements of the building as two parallel single-dimensional arrays. The same elements of the modules in different arrays are displaced relative to each other by the distance between the elements of the array.