

A method for improving the formol reaction of determining the beef and pork obtained from diseased animals relates to agriculture, in particular to veterinary medicine and can be used in production laboratories at meat processing facilities.