

A method for treatment of pulp-press water comprises isolation of high molecular weight compounds. The treatment is carried by means of flocculant, which at first is prepared in the form of gel, the flocculant is dosed prior to decanting tank of pulp-press water, the liquid phase is separated, heated for inhibition of activity of microorganisms, and supplied into diffusion apparatus.