

A device for providing transversal stability of the wheeled machines with a hinged frame consists of a body, in which horizontal and vertical hinges are mounted, and locking elements made in the form of lugs. The device is equipped with damping elements that are connected by one end to the lug on the hinge body, and by other end – to the lug of half-frame. The lugs are made in the form of cups.