

A system for heat transfer with liquid heat carriers comprises a source of thermal energy, this is connected to common system equipped with at least one heat exchange apparatus. The source of thermal energy is connected to the common system through at least one additional heat exchanger that together with circulation device and pipelines in the common system form at least one separate circuit of source of thermal energy.