

A device for transporting textile packages consists of a container, a trolley made with possibility of placing in a container and fixing levers for fastening the trolley in the container. The trolley is made with an axial vertical wall, on which from two opposite sides pins are fastened at an angle to the packages. The container is equipped with a platform for the trolley and doors. The back wall and doors of container are equipped with step ledges for fixing the packages with safety coatings which fixing surface is located normally to the pins.