

A method for balancing brightness of a screen that works in parallel light rays by means of a modulation spatial filter. To make a modulation spatial filter one uses a plate made of negative light-sensitive material with exposition in set state from source of radiation, with determination of darkening of light-sensitive material to given level.