

A method for surface strengthening of metallic articles by repeated surface strain in different directions, at which deformation forces are differentiated on passages in smaller size.