

Cloth for protecting against overheating comprises containers, which are connected with the cloth at the areas which correspond to the body parts and in which cold sources are arranged. The copolymer potassium acrylate is used as the cold source. The containers, in which the cold sources are arranged, are made as closed ones and in such a manner as to allow the water to permeate.