

A device for magnetic separation of bulk materials comprises a conveyer, electromagnetic systems installed over the conveyer on both sides of the axis of symmetry, and receivers of products of separation. In addition, the electromagnetic system are made in the form of cylinders, the device is also equipped with suspensions with possibility of changing the angle of installation of the electromagnetic systems relative to the conveyer bottom.