

A method for classifying the pea samples according to protein content comprises the assay for protein content in the mature seeds. The samples are distributed according to the scale comprising 9 classes (based on class intervals) and corresponding scores.