

A conductometric method for assaying the activity of ornithine decarboxylase in biological materials by the decrease in electric conductivity of the biological material.