

A device for remote information transfer comprises a laser light source, device for light flux control, temperature control and stabilization system. In order to multiply signal power the laser beam is directed to the chamber of device for light flux control as to inside which deep vacuum is created, and inner walls of which has mirror surface.