

A method of printed image quality control involves surface sensing with laser beam. The laser beam is directed to the printed image at angle of  $45^\circ$ , reflected optical (laser) beam is recorded by recording camera, and digital processing of signals is performed by means of computer software.